

Alessia Arteconi is Associate Professor at Università Politecnica delle Marche (Italy) since December 2018 and she teaches HVAC systems and Renewable Energy systems in Buildings. Since October 2019 she works as part-time associate professor at KU Leuven (Belgium).

She spent several periods abroad in other institutions: she was visiting researcher at University of Ulster – Northern Ireland in 2011, at TU/e – The Netherlands in 2012-2013 and at KU Leuven - Belgium from 2013 to present, working on the topic of demand side management in the built environment.

She took part to national and international research projects. She is author of about 100 papers published on international journals and presented at international conferences.

Her research topics are: (i) Heat pumps and thermal storage; (ii) demand side management and smart cities; (iii) Refrigeration and Cryogenics