

Matteo Girolamo Puttilli

PHD in Spatial Planning and Local Development at the Polytechnic of Torino, he is associate professor at the Department of History, Archaeology, Geography, Fine and Performing Arts of University of Florence, where he teaches Historical and political geography, Urban geography, and Geography education. His research interests lie at the intersection of social, political and environmental geography, and include: sustainability, environmental policies and territorial organization, with a specific focus on energy transition and agro-food networks; urban marginality and socio-spatial justice; policies and practices of local and urban development; geography education and didactics. He has conducted fieldwork in different countries and cultural contexts. He is involved in international and national research networks, and his work has been published in refereed international and national Class A journals, and by some of the main sectorial national publishers.